ing that kids should use the facility and play the sport of their birth sex. Should a child want to pursue expression as the other gender, that is their choice, but not at the expense of the rest of the community, she added.

By roll call, the board unanimously approved this proclamation to a standing ovation. D38 later released an announcement that "statements in this proclamation do not reflect the position or policy of Lewis-Palmer School District 38." See <https://www.lewispalmer.org/domain/33>.

motion regarding the opposition to the use of critical race theory and other race-based training, curricula, and methodology in public education. According to D38's document on CRT and diversity, equity and inclusion, it is "... an academic theory that seeks to examine how the concept of race underlies social infrastructure and applies within legal systems and other policies. This theory originated in the late 1970s and is typically taught at post-secondary levels of education. And D38 does not teach CRT." See <https://bit.ly/d38-crt>.

Parents spoke about CRT, saying that their extensive research showed it to be Marxist, that it teaches racism, hate of our nation and neighbors, and segregation. One parent said she had also done research and that CRT is a form of activism across society to convince our culture that the fundamental principles of our society are based on white racism. She says this strategy uses racial minorities to bring about a revolution. CRT teaches our kids to hate our country, vilify police, and causes anxiety in kids who would never ever behave this way, she said.

Graham said that MA was correcting course at the school to re-establish who it is with this resolution and the proclamation on gender protections. He asked that the board and parents take a stand in this war on the agenda to divide and conquer. Graham then moved that the board approve and adopt the resolution, which describes 10 concepts that will not be taught in the schools but also resolves that "nothing in these resolutions shall be construed to restrict any expressive activities protected under the Constitution, including academic freedom or student political speech.
