

of purchasing and transporting renewable water to supplement groundwater wells versus investing in reuse infrastructure. Krassa also gave a brief overview of the complexity of Monument's various water law cases.

There was a very technical question-and-answer period for the trustees to ask questions of these consultants who rarely meet directly with the board. Lytle generally supported reuse options while Krassa generally supported renewable water options. Both agreed with Barber that the town's groundwater wells will continue to become less productive and ever more expensive sources of drinking water. (ocn.me/v13n4.htm#bot0318)

On May 20, 2013 Sean Chambers, district manager of Cherokee Metropolitan District and president of the Pikes Peak Regional Water Authority (PPRWA), and Will Koger, a professional engineer for Forsgren Associates Inc., gave a presentation to the board on a proposed $180,000 regional water supply feasibility study that Forsgren will perform for water suppliers in central and northern El Paso County.

Chambers, Koger, and Barber recommended that the Town of Monument contribute to the cooperative study, which would "identify the critical water supply objectives of each of the participants, identify and analyze possible joint water supply projects to meet those objectives, and plan for the necessary
