

nect to the Monument water system and give their water rights to the town, Manning said, and the property owner would be responsible for paying for that connection.

Manning's staff report on the Dominguez annexation petition included references to two other neighboring properties (that are not part of the Dominguez property) and noted that Manning is currently in discussions about possible annexation to the town and residential development within the "future Willow Springs residential development" to the southwest and the "future Wagons West residential development" to east of the Dominguez property, and this extra information generated questions from the trustees.

Bornstein and several of the other new trustees asked questions about future development of this property (and the neighboring properties that were not part of this pe-tion), who would provide water if it were rezoned for denser development, and if there were enough water. Manning said that would be worked out in a future development proposal. He said for the level of development of this property, this one single family home would not be an issue (regarding water), but "in terms of future development I don't know that number, at which time we might have a problem."

Bornstein, Coopman, and

Wilson all asked for more time to consider the issue so they could understand it better and read through the whole board packet. Shupp and Lowe both suggested that the board could go into a short executive session to answer questions, but Bornstein said his colleagues had asked for more time. Coopman asked for several months to study it, but Shupp said that was not reasonable legally.

The trustees voted to continue both the annexation petitions and the associated public hearing to the May 2 meeting by a vote of 3-1-1; Kaiser voted no, and Bornstein abstained with no reason given.

Lowe asked each individual board member to contact him in the interim so he could provide the background information he would have given in the executive session.
