smartly, and know where revenue comes from.

- Michelle Glover – a licensed attorney and litigator and veteran who currently serves on the Monument Planning Commission. Her concerns were that the explosive growth in Monument over the past several years was putting the town at a tipping point, threatening its position as a family-friendly small town, and that the decisions were being made using a 13-year-old comprehensive plan as a guidepost.
- Kevin Sorenson – a computer engineer who said he is good at working with those who don't communicate well and helping foster communication in a non-threatening way to build consensus. He campaigned in the current election for trustee because he loves this area and wants to be more involved. His goals are low-density development, open spaces and parks, and downtown revitalization with protection against attacks from certain kinds of businesses.

The board consensus was that they would wait for additional applicants and then vote on May 2 to appoint a new trustee.

Bornstein then nominated Don Wilson for mayor pro-tem, and this motion was approved unanimously.

Public comments

At the beginning of the meeting, Maggie Williamson thanked the current Board of Trustees for the time they donated on behalf of the people. She congratulated the newly-elected trustees, saying they had her respect as elected officials but that they did not yet have her trust due to their unbecoming conduct. She said the new trustees made unwarranted statements and nasty and slanderous comments about board members Becki Tooley, John Howe, Jeff Smith, Kelly Elliott, Jeff Kaiser and Rafael Dominguez. She said the current board had made decisions this year that were unpopular with residents but per the law and with town's best interest in mind.

The meeting adjourned at about 9:30 p.m.
