The Palmer Ridge High School robotics team presented a demonstration of their robot and explained the process of the competition. They reached the quarterfinals at the state level and explained that they are trying to enlarge their membership and are coaching a middle school team so that students may begin earlier in their school career. Lewis-Palmer Elementary School Gifted Education teacher Maria Johnson and Ashley Pollard are coaches of the team.

Recognition of volunteers

Palmer Lake Elementary School parent Jim Riggins was recognized for his Green Panther project focusing on recycling and conservation. He provided an energy audit for the school as part of his activities.

Becky Worthington was recognized for serving as chair of the District Accountability Advisory Committee.

Two policies were offered for approval. The first involved graduation requirements. Under question was the requirement for physical education credit. Director Sarah Sampayo asked whether a waiver could be offered for students who participated in organized sports.

Director of Assessment and Gifted Education Lori Benton responded that principals have the final word on certification for graduation. The policy was approved.

A policy regarding student use of technology was discussed. Wording of the policy included the fact that students should have no expectation of privacy when using district technology. Board President Mark Pfoff said that this statement means that if the equipment is misused, the district can investigate.

Sampayo suggested that students should not be required to participate in the use of district resources and that anything students create becomes the property of the district.

Board Secretary Matthew Clawson said that parents may now file paperwork opting out of the use of district
